Hi! My name is Isti. I'm a student who is from West Java. I'm taking my bachelor degree in the UI, which is located in Depok. I, who come from a small town, feel very happy to study here. My major which is economics is the favourite major. I like my lecturers, especially Mrs. Ramadhani teaches who accountant. Although she is a senior lecturer, she is humble and modest. One day, while I was walking hurriedly to the class, I bumped into her. However, because she knew that I was in a hurry, she didn't angry. Therefore, because I like her, I want to be a lecturer just like Mrs. Ramadhani.

reduced relative clause of Wikipedia is different from that used in the EFL, giving as its main example: relative defining clause, students who will be selected tomorrow will be ... assets that the woman who is talking to my wife is our local member of Parliament. The boy who fell off his bike broke his leg. (which was made - simple past) None of the models inspected so far passed the test. That is not what we consider a reduced relative clause, for reasons I have spoken above. 1. Troubled in the city center, Martha had never seen a cow before. This can include adverbial expressions like now, so, etc. The florist sent the flowers... Last year's prize was won by Jenny MacDonald (who was) at the time still a student. A native speaker simply would not use a relative pronoun in these sentences; therefore, if it is not a relative clause in the first place, we can hardly make it a reduced relative clause. People in the back couldn't hear. That woman talking to my wife is ... we can also do this when the verb in the relative clause is and no participlice is involved: the man who is in that big black car is the president of Erewhon. The trees that fall in the storm resulted in several accidents. Review the Particle Clauses here. We can omit this participline when it is followed by aPrepositional: The people who were sitting on the other way could not hear my sister singing in the (which is chosen - simple gift) The progress made yesterday will give us a breakthrough. But running and sending could also be past participles being used in reduced relative clauses with passive meaning, and with the phrases continuing in a different way: The horse (which was) ran along the barn fell and his knight left. I saw a boy throwing a stone in the window. there is a noun (or as here, a pronoun) between the relative pronoun and the verb: That's how he got fired that shocked me particularly. The horse passed through the barn... - object of the preposition on They will have to sell the house (which) they bought just a year ago. You can read more about these constructions in my post in participles and participles an Leading someone to the way of the garden - deceiving someone, making them believe in something that is not the real Wikipedia gives two examples of the effect of the garden path. Peter Donaldson, (which is) our manager, graduate of chemical engineering. NOT Selected students tomorrow are those... A video on YouTube suggests that the following constructions are reduced relative clauses: There's dogs walking out there There's a car parked next to my because we can (according to the teacher) say: Are there dogs out there? NOT that woman my wife is talking to... One of the jewels of Glasgow is the Merchant City, (which is) now a thriving cultural district. Download this PDF survey here. The man being taken by the police. Glasgow, the largest city in Scotland, is on the Clyde River. These are not natural phrases, and it is highly unlikely that a native speaker would never pronounce them. (which are being planted - continuous present) Trees that in the storm have been removed. In EFL, we understand this to be simply dropping the relative pronoun when it refers to the object of the following verb. The book, (which was) first published in 1970, has sold over a million copies. - direct object A bit of grammar jargon - These structures are sometimes known as having a zero relative clauses which have been reduced (shorthened), they are not what we normally refer to in EFL as reduced relative clauses, which involve one very basic principle: As well as the relative pronoun being left out, the verb of the relative clauses, including any auxiliary, is replaced by an -ing or -ed (etc) participle. Why garden path effect? Anyone wanting a ticket for the Final see me. Adding to sentences with present participles and past participles and past participles and past participles and past participles and teaching ideas. Just for fun we'll have a quick look at this, but it's very unlikely you will ever have any problems of this nature. Peter, (who was) concentrating on his work, didn't hear the doorbell. The first part of the worksheet gives an insight into what the participle clauses are and what three types we can distinguish. The boy falling off his bicycle broke his leg. That woman who my wife is talking to is our local Member of Parliament. Reduced relative clauses are used most often instead of defining relative clauses, which are what we'll be mainly looking at. But as we have seen, we can also make reduced relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses and sometimes even from perfect tenses. - Several websites are suggest that we can only reduce relative clauses from simple tenses are suggest to the several websites are suggest to the s storm have been removed. The florist sent the flowers to the address the had given her. 2. They are like relative clause with passive single completed actions The boy who was knocked off his bicycle broke his leg. Passive The man who is being taken away by the police is our neighbour. - direct object This is the hotel (which) I was telling you about. a. Living abroad at that time, the young woman didn't see her family very often. We sometimes also use reduced non-defining relative clauses. The students who should be selected are those that have worked the hardest. But very often we use an adverbial participle clause instead. There are some boys playing in the street. Part of the ambiguity is in the use here of the verb race, which could have two possible meanings: To run very fast To ride or drive something, for example a horse or car, very fast And of course we'd normally expect a florist to send flowers rather than receive them. (who wants - present simple) The train now arriving at Platform 3 is the 4.20 to Paddington (which is now arriving - present continuous) Teams completing the first round go into the quarter-finals. unless it is the event or action in the main clause: Trees which fell in the storm have resulted in several accidents. The people sitting at the back couldn't hear. You can pretty well forget the Wikipedia entry on reduced relative clauses as being of any practical help in using them, but it does talk about an interesting but pretty rare phenomenon known as the garden path effect. There is somebody having a party upstairs. The rest of the article does talk about the use of participles in reduced relative clauses, but is all about the 'garden path effect', where their use can occasionally cause ambiguities. I've found several problems with the way Reduced Relative clauses are treated on the Internet.
